The World's Common Estate

President Harding and Secretary Hughes, by reaching the sound decision to give full protection to all American rights accruing to the United States as a result of the common victory of the Allied powers, show themselves not only good patriots but wise and far-seeing internationalists.

There is but one enduring basis on which world union can be built. It is the principle of a community and equivalency of right among the nations drawn together by a great necessity. This principle does not rest for solidity on any treaty or written agreement. Whether or not this country signs the Versailles treaty, or whether or not it enters any formal league, is not of primary conse-The principle derives its force from deeper sources than paper instruments. It antedates and precedes such things, and its integrity is not impaired by appearance or nonappearance at particular council tables.

To discriminate, to make title to common rights depend on formalities and ceremonies, is to stimulate a separatist spirit that is bound to give birth to discord among natural partilar "no trespass" signs, and only with difficulty can collisions and quarrels be avoided.
